

144,000: 42 – Link with 12,000 Elect in India, Pakistan & Bangladesh

As explained in Birth of the Light Body, the power of understanding functions on the passive or feminine polarity as the complementary partner of the positive-polarity power of imagination. This is one reason why I have positioned understanding-illumination primarily in the Eastern Hemisphere in the countries of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

These countries once were part of one nation, but they split into three separate entities when they gained independence from Great Britain in 1947. The separation was along religious lines, with India's 1.2 billion citizens currently being 80% Hindu, 13% Muslim, 2% Christian and 1% Buddhist; Pakistan (now 173 million citizens) and what originally was called East Pakistan but which in 1971 became Bangladesh (now 160 million citizens) presently are about 95% Muslim. During the 1947 formation of the three countries, approximately 500,000 citizens were killed in Hindu-Muslim violence. Since then, India and Pakistan have fought four wars, primarily over the disputed areas of Kashmir and Jammu.

Hinduism does not have one single creed or set of teachings based on the teachings of a particular prophet. Rather, it comprises numerous ways, tenets, approaches and practices. Considered the world's oldest religion, its written teachings are found principally in the Upanishads and Vedas, and in the practices of the many forms of yoga. The best of Hinduism points the way to understanding, illumination and enlightenment. However, Hinduism's multiple and sometimes conflicting approaches, including its worship of multiple gods, goddesses and animals, are so convoluted and complex that they often promote the mortal confusion and illusions that they strive to elucidate and transcend. In this sense, Hinduism portrays the best and the worst of the power of understanding.

In Sananda's lifetime as Gautama the Buddha (his other incarnations include Zarathustra, Moses, Elijah, Socrates and Jesus the Christ), our planetary leader and wayshower developed a simple, straightforward, clear and concise approach to enlightenment. This incorporated the best of Hindu teachings, while stripping it of its blind spots and byways. He treated men as equal brothers in the one family of man, rather than labeling them in a caste system whose lowest rung was the so-called “untouchables.” He included women as his disciples. He taught the Middle Way. He promoted practical methods and applications, and refused to get caught up in esoteric, metaphysical, intellectual pursuits that yielded little spiritual fruit. Amongst his teachings was a treatise about the errors of 62 religious pathways and beliefs of his time, which have persisted until this day. However, despite his cosmic clarity, most Hindus rejected Buddhism. Today, only about 1% of Indians are Buddhists.

From the etheric planes, the ascended master Kut Humi, who is Chohan or Director of the Second Ray of Understanding and Wisdom, helps to oversee the spiritual development and evolution of Hindus. He does this in his role or identity as Babaji, whose name means “revered father.” In his physical incarnations, Kut Humi has been Aristotle, William Shakespeare, St. Francis of Assisi, John the Beloved, Leonardo da Vinci and Lao-tzu. As Babaji, he has not incarnated physically but rather has presented himself in what might be called a holographic projection, much in the way that Jesus during his transfiguration presented lifelike images of himself as Elijah and Moses. Paramahansa Yogananda wrote of Babaji in his text Autobiography of a Yogi. We will link with Kut Humi/Babaji as we project understanding and illumination to Hindus, Muslims and all others in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

As part of our interdimensional linking, we also will join with Mahatma Gandhi, who in a prior incarnation was Jesus’ disciple Philip. Gandhi probed the depths and common teachings of Christianity, Islam and especially Hinduism, and developed his pathway called “satyagraha” or truth force. Commonly called non-violence, Gandhi used this practice to free India from Great Britain. Currently, despite their professed reverence for Gandhi, few Indians actually apply what he taught and demonstrated. Imagine, for example, a widespread movement of non-violent love in action by Indians dealing with Pakistanis.

Islamic teachings and practices were introduced into India in the early 7th century, with expanded development especially from 1200-1500 AD. On the one hand, the five pillars of Islam present a concise, practical, readily understandable approach to spirituality, particularly as elucidated and practiced in the mystic Sufi tradition. On the other hand, such a defined and detailed approach lends itself to strict, fundamental regimentation, and to non-cooperation with other religions. Moreover, Muslim fanatics falsely allege that Islam sanctions and promotes violence as a way to promote its teachings. What is needed today is a Middle Way that incorporates the best of Hindu and Muslim teachings, and that transcends them.

On August 29, 2009, I dreamt that I was with a middle-aged woman who was from the India-Pakistan-Bangladesh region. She had no distinct features or clothing that defined her as being from one or another of the three countries. Rather, she represented and was a spokeswoman for all people throughout this entire area. In a calm, wise, loving voice that could not be disputed or denied, she said that the solution to all of the challenges of the whole region was simple and two-fold. First, the people were to choose peace. When they had peace within and desired peace with their neighbors, the next step was love. Peace and love would heal the widespread poverty, illiteracy and illness of all three countries, plus resolve their political, military, religious and economic conflicts. I was stunned by the cosmic simplicity and truth of it all.

Visualization: We link with the 12,000 or more elect in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh of every religion, profession, age, ethnic group, race, gender and political belief. First, we unite with them in peace, and then we add love. In response to the vast complexity of the enormous problems in this region of the world comes this simple formula of peace and love, which is the core of Hinduism, Islam, Christianity, Buddhism, Jainism, Judaism, Zoroastrianism and every other religion.

Peace. Peace be unto you. Love. Love your neighbor as yourself. In this Middle Way, all 1.6 billion souls in these three nations are awakened, uplifted, enlightened, illuminated and healed. So we see and understand it. So it is.
